

Connected Living's Third Graduating Class Recognized at Hall Towers

Connected Living graduates and those who continue to learn in the program gathered together for fellowship, food and fun on May 7, 2014, at Hall Towers. Joined by Greensboro Housing Authority (GHA) and Connected Living staff, seniors in the group spoke of the strides they have made in learning to maneuver in an ever-increasing digital world. Many of the Connected Living participants expressed how proud they are of their new-found computer skills and how much they owe and appreciate Latte Dawkins, Connected Living's ambassador, for her patience and knowledge.

Connected Living was launched in August 2012 at both Hall Towers and Stoneridge communities. The social networking company provides technology, programming, classes and support to get the digitally underserved online. GHA computer labs in the two senior communities are open two days a week for instruction.
